May 20th, 2020 - I suspect that some readers will jump to particular chapters to see what I have to say about issues in which they are most engaged for example the chapters frost in Jerusalem and remembering the future address the Israeli-Palestinian conflict in significant detail with nostalgic hope for what may yet be accomplished in that tortured part of the world.

In his new book see it feelingly classic novels autistic readers and the schooling of a no good english professor thought in the act savarese ralph james challenges the notion that autistic readers are unable to immerse themselves in figurative language or get lost in imaginative worlds. He argues that autistic readers possess the capacity for deep emotional engagement with classic literature and that their unique perspectives can enrich the reading experience.

'Disability Studies and the Personal or How You Can Learn

May 21st, 2020 - By Ralph Savarese. This essay began as a response to a review in American Literary History of my recent book See It Feelingly: Classic Novels, Autistic Readers, and the Schooling of a No Good English Professor. The reviewer, Mark Osteen, behaved I believe unethically. It quickly morphed into a story of negotiating with the editor of ALH, Gordon Hutner, who agreed to publish a formal reply.'
